

National Care Service

Social Work and Social Care

Easy Read

Social Work and Social Care – what we want to happen

Social work and social care services should be part of the National Care Service.

This will make sure health, social work and social care work better together.

Services will fit around the child, family, or person who needs support.

It will be easier for people to get services.

It will be easier for people who need more than one kind of support or service.

One organisation would be in charge of:

- how people get services
- how people are assessed for what services they need

- how services get money

- who is responsible for services working well.

Social work services would be the same everywhere and staff would have the same expertise.

Expertise means having a lot of experience and knowing a lot about something.

There would be a National Social Work Agency that covers all of Scotland to make sure social workers can share what works well.