A Scottish Government spokesman said:

“There is no statutory right for parents to withdraw their child from any aspect of schooling other than some parts of religious and sexual education. If a parent does not wish their child to take part in an aspect of teaching and learning, they can discuss this with their school. This is the same position as has existed for decades.

“We have worked closely with SOLAR throughout this process. Having asked for SOLAR for a view, we received a response and communicated that to Directors of Education in good faith.”

Hi there,

I asked Solar about Graeme Logan's letter of last week regarding testing opt out since it referenced their advice.

This is their response. It is from [redacted] , [redacted – 2 sentences]

Happy to take any lines.

Thanks,

[redacted]

SOLAR's response:

In regards the reference to SOLAR in Mr Graeme Logan's letter to Directors of Education, we would like to clarify SOLAR's position. SOLAR has not advised the Scottish Government that parents don't have the option to opt out of the assessments. SOLAR does not have an agreed position on this matter and has therefore not provided any formal or informal view. Our understanding is that the view quoted came from a local authority and not from SOLAR.

To clarify, SOLAR works alongside other stakeholders including the Scottish Government on a number of matters but we cannot and do not provide any stakeholder with legal advice, we can and sometimes do provide a SOLAR view but the Scottish Government and other stakeholders would need to seek their own legal advice on such matters. In this instance, SOLAR has not provided any view.
