Scotland's Citizen's Basic Income: Background and Update Paper for DWP and Pilots Working Group

Background:

1. In 2017 the Scottish Government announced funding of £250,000 to support local authorities to develop a business case to pilot a basic income. This paper outlines the practical feasibility of testing and seeks to articulate what Scottish Ministers aim to achieve through developing testing of a Citizen's Basic Income (CBI).

2. The Scottish Government is committed to delivering a social security system with dignity, fairness and respect at its centre to better meet the needs of the people of Scotland. The Scottish Government is already taking steps to improve the benefits being devolved to Scotland by increasing Carer's Allowance, introducing the Best Start Grant for parents and carers on low incomes to help at key stages of children's lives and transforming the disability assessment process.

3. However, increasing wealth inequality, advances in technology and increasing automation of services means the world of work is constantly changing. The Scottish Government is interested in looking at innovative ideas that might help meet these challenges in the longer term.

4. Advocates of CBI suggest it could provide a more respectful system. Nonetheless, it is a bold and potentially expensive proposal that would represent a radical change. It is also highly controversial, and has many critics. The Scottish Government understands and acknowledges many of the criticisms of a CBI, however, it has been clear that it will base its decision on proceeding further with the concept on robust evidence. It is the Scottish Government's view that this is an idea worth due diligence and testing.

5. All evidence and new ideas identified through CBI testing could be supportive in determining new or incrementally improved approaches to Social Security which have the potential to benefit both the Scottish and UK Governments. While it may be possible to experiment with some aspects of a CBI in Scotland, the Scottish Government is aware it cannot carry out a full pilot without the co-operation of UK Government departments responsible for the tax and benefits system. From our perspective, it is crucial the pilots identify learning that can help develop the evidence base around social security in the medium term.

6. [redacted]

Progress to date

7. The Scottish Government is taking a sensible and proportionate approach by supporting four local authorities as they explore the feasibility of small-scale trials in Scotland. [redacted]. The pilots have established: an officials Steering Group, an accountability governance structure through Councillor and Stakeholder Groups, a website, as well as a social media presence. The Steering Group is Chaired by NHS

Health Scotland who also provide the Secretariat and lead on the development of the research and evaluation design. The other members of the Steering Group are the four local authorities and the Scottish Government. An invitation has been issued to the DWP and the Scottish Government would very much welcome their input.

8. To support the initial process of developing a business case, the Scottish Government identified a feasibility fund of £250,000 over two years. The four local authorities developed a collaborative bid for the fund which was welcomed by the Scottish Government. Much of the initial set-up research will be the same for any pilot, thus, it seems sensible to streamline this. The collaboration also means that the four pilot areas can be well co-ordinated as they move forward to ensure that, if a pilot does go ahead, the design, results and findings can test a range of scenarios which may be of interest for Scotland. To enable this collaboration to work effectively, the Bid allows for the recruitment of a Project Co-Ordinator who will be based within the Improvement Service. This post was filled recently.

9. The pilots are required to produce an interim progress report by October 2019, with a full business case to be presented by March 2020. This will cover all legislative, financial, practical and ethical issues. The Scottish Government has not made any commitment to funding the pilot itself. Due diligence will be required on the business case before such decisions could be considered.

10. There has been substantial media and Freedom of Information interest in CBI. The Social Security Committee (Holyrood) held an evidence session and a Cross-Party Working Group has been established, co-convened by Ivan McKee (Glasgow Provan, SNP) and Alex Rowley (Mid Scotland and Fife, Labour) with MSPs Alex Neil (SNP), Alison Johnstone (Green), Gordon MacDonald (SNP) and Tom Arthur (SNP).

Aims of the pilots

11. The primary aim is to test the CBI concept as a whole programme, and to understand costs, savings, benefits and weaknesses of the concept, including potential winners and losers. Some of this [redacted].

12. Given the above, [redacted], if they are funded, to building the evidence base and providing 'lessons learned' that could be utilised within the Social Security (SS) and wider policy system.

28. The Scottish Government welcomes and encourages the recipients of this paper to share their thoughts and engage with us in the design and possible roll out of the CBI pilots.

CITIZENS BASIC INCOME – SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT APPROACH

Purpose

1 In 2017 the Scottish Government announced funding of £250,000 to support local authorities in producing a business case to pilot basic income. The attached paper (Annex A) provides an update on this work, outlines the practical feasibility of testing and seeks to articulate what Ministers are aiming to achieve through developing testing of Basic Income.

Priority

Routine

Background

2 The basic income is a concept that advocates suggest could provide a more respectful, dignified and rights based social security system. Scottish Government have shown interest in this concept and while understanding and acknowledging the many criticisms of a basic income Ministers have taken the view that it is an idea worth testing and have supported four pilot local authorities to develop their plans.

3 The attached paper (Annex A) sets out the practical feasibility of testing. [redacted].

ANNEX A

Scotland's Basic Income

Scoping Paper for Scottish Government

Purpose

1. In 2017 the Scottish Government announced funding of £250,000 to support local authorities in producing a business case to pilot basic income. This paper outlines the practical feasibility of testing and seeks to articulate what Ministers aim to achieve through developing testing of Basic Income (BI). Annex B sets out early work by the pilots in specifying the proposed BI experiment and Annex C sets out some suggestions on ideas for testing.

Background

2. Scottish Government's desire to progress testing of Basic Income (BI) is based on our perspective that there are substantial flaws within the current Social Security system as shown by the issues with the roll out of Universal Credit; the punitive conditionality and sanctions regime; as well as the lack of dignity and respect to human rights in the system. The Scottish Government wishes to deliver a better social security system in the long term building on principles of dignity and respect, and tackling poverty.

3. The basic income is one concept that advocates suggest could provide a more respectful system. However, it is a bold and potentially expensive proposal that would represent a radical change. It is also highly controversial and has many critics. We understand and acknowledge many of the criticisms of a basic income but have been clear that we would prefer to base our decisions on robust evidence. In our view it is an idea worth due diligence and testing.

4. [redacted]

5. [redacted]

6. We believe we are taking a sensible and proportionate approach by supporting four local authorities as they explore the feasibility of small scale trials in Scotland. The four local authorities, Fife; North Ayrshire; City of Edinburgh and City of Glasgow independently expressed an interest in developing a basic income pilot in Scotland in 2016. They then decided to work together to pool their ideas and resources and to develop a research design which allows comparability across the pilots, thereby testing the concept for Scotland. They have established an officials Steering Group and an accountability governance structure with a Councillor and Stakeholder Group, website (<http://basicincome.scot/>) and a social media presence. [redacted]. The other members of the Steering Group are the 4 local authorities, SG and an invitation has been issued to DWP although at this stage they have not accepted the invitation.

7. To support the initial process of developing a business case Scottish Government identified a feasibility fund of £250,000 over 2 years. The four local authorities developed a collaborative bid for the fund which was welcomed by Scottish Government. Much of the initial set-up research will be the same for any pilot so it seems sensible to streamline this. The collaboration also means that the four pilot areas can be well co-ordinated as they move forward to ensure that, if a pilot goes ahead, the design, results and findings can test a range of scenarios which may be of interest for Scotland. To enable this collaboration to work effectively the Bid includes for a Project Co-Ordinator to be recruited, and based within the Improvement Service. This post is currently being recruited.

8. The pilots are required to produce an interim progress report by October 2019. A full business case should be presented by March 2020 which covers all legislative, financial, practical and ethical issues. Scottish Government has not made any commitment to funding the pilot itself. Due diligence will be required on the business case before such decisions could be considered.

9. There has been substantial media and Freedom of Information interest in BI. The Social Security held an evidence session and a Cross Party Working Group has been established co-convened by Ivan McKee (Glasgow Provan, SNP) and Alex Rowley (Mid Scotland and Fife, Labour) with MSPs Alex Neil (SNP), Alison Johnstone (Green), Gordon MacDonald (SNP), Tom Arthur (SNP).
