Equality Impact Assessment

This equality impact assessment (EQIA) has been developed to consider impacts on equality from the revised guidance Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Non-Residential Premises.

There are no new policies or requirements on those with responsibilities under the legislation. This is merely a revision, consolidation and general updating of existing guidance.

The guidance is intended to be of assistance to those with responsibility for fire safety in non-domestic premises across a range of businesses. It does not prescribe any particular measures to be put in place and, whilst it may make recommendations which might have financial impacts on businesses, these are not new, and not required by legislation.

There is no obligation to adopt any particular solution in the guides if the outcomes of a fire safety risk assessment can be met in some other way.

The enforcing authority, the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service (SFRS), is required to take into account the content of the guides to assist in determining whether enforcement action may be necessary, but in doing so it should have a flexible approach to enforcement.

The equality impact assessment sets out:

- the aims of the guidance;
- the equality issues faced by people in respect of race, gender, disability, age, sexual orientation, transgender, religion and belief and work which is going on to try to address relevant issues; and
- potential impacts of the guidance.

This EQIA assesses the impact of this guidance, and should be used by the SFRS when assessing the impact on equality groups of its policies, plans, services and delivery.

Define the aims of the policy

Title of policy	Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Non-Residential Premises
Strategic Outcomes	Safer and Stronger

What does the information you have tell you about how this policy might impact positively or negatively on the different groups within the target audience?

Summary of potential impacts of the guidance

The existing guidance, which will be replaced by this new guidance, is for the use of dutyholders to help them understand their responsibilities and for the safety of employees, customers and anyone else who might find themselves on non-residential premises. Any benefit (improved fire safety) achieved through the revised guidance should be positive for such persons.

The revised guidance covers existing non-residential premises without sleeping accommodation, such as offices, shops and entertainment venues. It will consolidate and supersede the following existing guides:

- Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Educational and Day Care for Children Premises: February 2008
- Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Places of Entertainment and Assembly: December 2007
- Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Factories and Storage Premises: February 2008
- Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Offices, Shops and Similar Premises: February 2008
- Practical Fire Safety Guidance for Transport Premises: February 2008

These five guides contain a substantial amount of duplication and we believe that reducing the number of guides will make them easier to use for duty holders and enforcers, and provide greater clarity on the guide most relevant for particular premises. A reduced number of guides will also be quicker for the SG to update when necessary, with a subsequent benefit for dutyholders and enforcers.

The new guide has a substantial number of editorial changes from the existing 5 guides it will replace. In line with the changes introduced into the care home guide revision in March 2014, which were widely welcomed, the new guide contains improvements to text to aid understanding of content and greater use of explanations. Other key changes include the removal of technical annexes and the incorporation of the content into the chapters so that subject information sits together, and a refinement of the risk assessment process to be more closely aligned to the legislation.

A public consultation was undertaken from 28 November 2016 to 6 March 2017. The consultation period was extended by two weeks to make allowances for the Christmas/New Year period.

Eighteen responses were received, but there are no changes to this document as a result of the responses.

The impact assessment should now be authorised by either the Division or Group Head or equivalent.
