Foreword

AGE, HOME AND COMMUNITY – THE NEXT PHASE

Foreword

When we first published Age Home and Community in 2011, we recognised that what we did today would influence our housing choices now and in the future. This remains just as relevant today as it did in 2011.

A housing system that works for older people supports our aim of creating a fairer Scotland, and its importance across the range of policy areas that affect older people continues to be recognised in this strategy refresh. We know that most older people want to remain in their home as they age, and that this can have significant benefits for their well-being, as well as the service they receive from the wider health and social care system.

A lot has happened since 2011. We have improved people's ability to live independently in their own home, through the work of the Adaptations Working Group, and we have supported digital technology driven housing support where appropriate, including telecare and telehealth. We continue to deliver flexibility in new affordable supply with 91% of houses built by housing associations and councils in 2016-17 meeting Housing for Varying needs standards and by introducing shared equity for older people, through access to our Shared Equity schemes. As part of our aim to provide greater help for people living with dementia, we have also supported the development of a dementia and housing design guide.

But we know that there is still work to do. The purpose of this refresh is to build on the progress we have made so far, informed by the mid-point review published in October 2017. We must ensure that we continue to take effective action so that older people in Scotland enjoy full and positive lives in homes that meet their needs.

We all have a role in achieving the aims set out in this strategy, and we value the connections that organisations have with older people and their families. Shaping the future of housing for older people is a responsibility for all of us.

We should all be thinking about where, and how, we will live as we grow older, what our future housing requirements may be and encouraging others to do the same.

Finally, thank you to the members of the monitoring and advisory group who have contributed their time and expertise to develop this refreshed strategy.

Stakeholder Perspectives

“Housing Options Scotland very much welcomes the revised strategy. Our clients achieve much better housing outcomes when partners work together strategically and creatively.

We particularly appreciate the emphasis on information, advice and thinking ahead. The strategy is a great example of what can be achieved collectively and will have a positive impact on the lives of older people now and in the future.

Moira Bayne,
Housing Options Scotland

“Housing is far more than a roof over our heads; it is an integral part of everyone’s life and has an impact on your health and well-being.”

Glenda Watt,
Scottish Older People’s Assembly

“Age Scotland welcomes the strong recognition which this refreshed strategy provides of the housing needs of older people and the clear determination to ensure that these needs are at the heart of government policy and local planning decisions.”

Jim Eadie,
Age Scotland

What do Older People Think Makes a Good Place to Live?

What do older people think makes a good place to live?

It is important that we listen to what older people themselves have to say. Below are some views from older people provided by Age Scotland and the Scottish Older People's Assembly.

“My friends live nearby. It is good to know that if anything happens help is at hand.”

“The neighbours are helpful and are always there if you need them. I am close to shops and the Post Office.”

“A warm, safe place where you live with people whom you love or at least like, whether family or friends. Even if you live alone, as long as you are content and can live the life you choose without financial worries. Importantly being fit enough to get out and about and be involved in pursuits you find of interest.”

“My new log burning heating provides heat and hot water. It is warm and cosy and affordable to run.”

“[My house] is in a pleasant village with good transport links should I have health difficulties and be unable to drive.

It is not the house I would live in by choice but it was the best I could find when I decided it would be wise to move from my house in the country into a village or town. It was a sensible move to make bearing in mind my age and possible limitations which might arise as I grow older.”

“I live in a little semi-detached sheltered one bedroom bungalow. I love living there. We have a nice garden where we grow vegetables and flowers. It is good that we have a ground floor house and are close to services. The shops, the Church and GP are all on our doorstep and we have good links to public transport. ”

“I live in the town centre just a couple of minutes walk from the shops. Having a garden front and back makes me feel close to nature but is still small enough to be manageable.”

“People make the perfect home. Following that warmth, close to amenities, probably as you get old all on the one level, so no stairs.”

Introduction

Introduction

When we published Age Home and Community: A Strategy for Housing for Scotland's Older People: 2012 - 21 in 2011, it confirmed our commitment to help older people do what they told us they wanted to do – live independently at home. We recognised that living in the right home with suitable physical features and appropriate support services would, along with access to the right advice, enable people to live safely and independently at home.

We also committed to a mid-point review to assess progress and consider which actions should be taken forward to the next phase of the strategy. We published Age, Home and Community – The First Five Years on 30 October 2017, highlighting progress made on the original actions with case studies that illustrated how older people have benefited and improved their ability to live independently and safely at home.

There have been many positive developments since 2011, which are changing the way we provide services and support to those who need them:

- The formation of 31 new Health and Social Care Partnerships set up to deliver integrated health and social care services.
- The Scotland Act 2016 devolving a range of social security powers to the Scottish Parliament.
- The introduction of Self-Directed Support following the Social Care (Self-directed Support) (Scotland) Act 2013, providing people with greater choice and control over how their care and support is delivered.

- The Fairer Scotland Action Plan (2016), published following the Fairer Scotland conversation, with 50 actions, including specific actions directed towards older people, to help tackle poverty, reduce inequality and build a fairer and more inclusive Scotland.

We have responded to these changes by working together with stakeholders to develop policy and support good practice to achieve our aim of older people enjoying full and positive lives.

Age, Home and Community – The Next Phase sets out our approach to housing and older people. Providing the right advice, house and support will allow older people to live the way they choose. It sets out our vision for the next phase of the strategy and has been developed using what we have learned from the experiences of older people and the insights of organisations who work with them.

Our vision is for older people in Scotland to enjoy full and positive lives in homes that meet their needs. To achieve this aim we have identified three principles: Right Advice, Right Home and Right Support. We will focus on these three key areas to achieve the changes required to enable our growing population of older people to live safely and independently at home for as long as they chose to do so.

It is important that our older people's housing strategy connects with other policies that affect older people, with clear outcomes and measurable actions. We are working with our analysts to identify measurable targets and will also develop an action plan with the advisory group once the refreshed strategy is published. Helping older people to live independently at home cuts across many areas of policy and practice, so it is right to set this strategy in a broader context. Ageing is an important cross-cutting policy issue and work is on-going in a number of other areas such as dementia, and social isolation and loneliness.

We recently consulted on a new fuel poverty strategy which included proposals on a new target and a revised definition of fuel poverty that is more focussed on low income households. We will introduce a Fuel Poverty (Targets, Definition and Strategy) (Scotland) Bill to Parliament in summer 2018. The Bill will achieve three key things – it will set a new target for fuel poverty; introduce a new definition that will focus our support on those who need it most, no matter where in Scotland they live; and mandate the production of a new long-term fuel poverty strategy.

This refreshed Strategy, along with other relevant Scottish Government action plans and strategies and local authority interventions, will continue to drive change to improve the lives of older people. These initiatives are referred to throughout this document, and highlight the importance of the collaborative cross-cutting policy work that is needed to deliver our vision of enabling older people in Scotland to enjoy full and positive lives in homes that meet their needs.

We will monitor and measure our progress to ensure we are delivering the support Scotland's older people require in order to access the right advice, the right home and the right support.

Shaping the Strategy Refresh

Shaping the Strategy Refresh

This refresh has been developed with help from many people and organisations. It is the product of collaboration between colleagues from across housing, health, social justice, social care, equality and the third sector. We have also received valuable practical support from stakeholders who have helped gather contributions and views from older people, their families and carers.

Since publication, the direction and progress of the strategy has been monitored by the Older People's Housing Strategy Monitoring and Advisory Group which meets twice a year. Members include COSLA, Scottish Older People's Assembly, Age Scotland, ALACHO, housing associations, third sector housing, disability and carers organisations, tenants' representatives, private house builders and landlords. This group has helped guide and influence the First Five Years report, as well as helping to define the content and purpose of the Next Phase.

Our advisory group members work directly with older people, ensuring a wide range of voices have helped shape and develop the refreshed strategy. We have drawn on the views and experiences of older people to help us gather information on what our focus should be for the next phase of the strategy.

The contribution of housing is also an important consideration in future planning for health and social care, actions on dementia should include housing-related solutions and technology enabled care and telehealth will not achieve full impact unless the role of the home is considered in its development and delivery. We will ensure that government policies align and that services are designed to put individuals firmly at the centre. We will continue to work with our partners and stakeholders to provide the right help at the right time to deliver the right outcomes for individuals.

Our Vision

Our Vision

We want older people in Scotland to enjoy full and positive lives in homes that meet their needs.

We will take a person centred approach to achieving our aim of older people enjoying full and positive lives, in a home that meets their needs. This allows individuals to have their say about what they want from their home; the size, location, community, technology, access to transport and the many individual requests that make their home ideal for them.

We have identified three Principles that will help to achieve this vision:

- Right Advice
- Right Home
- Right Support

Right Advice

Advice services can play an important role in helping people understand their rights and to find solutions to a range of issues. We want to help older people continue to live safely and independently at home. Access to the right information and advice at the right time ensures people can make an informed choice about the type of home they live in now and in the future.

Good information also allows people to decide what care and support would suit their own individual situation. Many people have their own network of family and friends to turn to when they need advice but this is not always the case. It is important to offer independent advice services at the right time and in the right format to help support people making important decisions, such as whether to move home, seek extra support or install housing adaptations.

Whether the person seeking advice is an older person or their representative, we believe that awareness can be increased through the availability of high quality, accessible information and advice services. We recognise that local and national information services are needed. Both are extremely useful and serve different purposes, providing the individual with choice and tailored options. There are many excellent advice services in Scotland, but the volume and variety can confuse and deter people from taking that initial step. While many services are intended specifically for older people, more can be done to ensure these reach the people they were intended to help. We believe that putting the person at the centre and asking what they want, will help us understand the best way to provide the information in the right format and in the right place to allow older people, their families and carers to access advice on housing and support.

The Scottish Government is committed to supporting projects that provide timely, high quality advice to those in need. Local authorities are best placed to fund advice services that meet the demands of their local area. Scottish Government is also working to improve the standard of information and advice provision throughout Scotland by developing and promoting the Scottish National Standards for Information and Advice Providers.

Right Home

Making sure everyone has a safe, warm affordable home is central to this Government's drive to make this country fairer and more prosperous. As people get older their circumstances may change and they may have to consider if their home still meets their needs and can enable them to continue to live independently. Deciding whether or not their current home is the right home is not easy and it helps to have as much information as possible.

The majority of older people own their own homes, but there are also many who live in social housing plus small, but increasing numbers privately renting. There can be confusion over the names for different types of housing for older people, such as amenity, retirement, sheltered, very sheltered and housing with care.

We therefore need to make sure that there is sufficient and suitable advice on housing options to let people know what is available, such as different tenure choices, co-housing, home-sharing, mortgages specifically for older people or shared equity options.

We recognise that many older people want to stay in their own home and it is important that existing properties suit the needs of the individual. Adaptations, digital technology and technology enabled care solutions are just a few of the measures that can help maintain independence, enabling older people to stay in their home. However, in some cases this will not be possible and the right decision may be to move. We want to make sure that individuals have access to all the information on the various housing options available and are supported to make decisions that suit their needs.

Our Vision

Right Support

The right support can be the key to enabling people to remain independently at home and, in most cases, at costs lower than the alternative residential care options. Local authorities and housing associations have a long tradition of providing low level, preventative support services such as housing support, telecare, handyperson services, Care and Repair and community support.

Technology, including telecare services, can provide significant benefits for older people and carers to help support and maintain independence and wellbeing. Technology can help provide care but also provides additional benefits, e.g. reducing isolation and loneliness. Providing the skills and support to enable older people to use digital tools and technologies, which allow them access services online, engage with social media and connect with friends and families, can have a positive impact on wellbeing.

Staff training and raising awareness are key elements to ensuring that older people are receiving the right support for their specific needs. There is evidence, in particular the Christie Commission report, which advocates a focus on prevention. Investment in services which support older people to remain independent, can make a big difference to quality of life, as well as being cost-effective. Support can come in many forms; from family and friends, as well as structured support services.

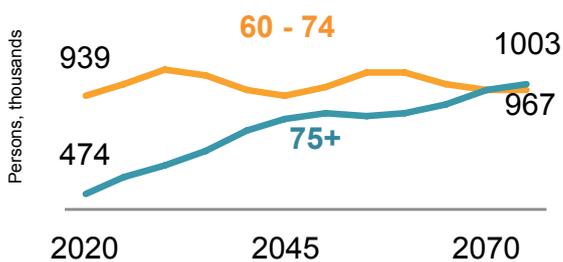

A supportive local community, particularly in rural areas and the islands, can be equally as important in supporting older people. Community networks can have a significant positive impact on tackling isolation and loneliness and improving overall wellbeing. Older people are an asset to their communities and they should feel empowered to take action and be heard on priorities that matter to them in the community in which they live.

Underlying Trends

Underlying Trends

We know that Scotland's population is getting older and that this will have important public policy implications, which includes housing. Forecasting these demographic trends enables us to plan for services and health provision as well as additional or different housing provision. The graphics below outline the key underlying trends that we need to be aware of in ensuring the older people have housing that is appropriate and continues to meet their needs:

Scotland's older population is increasing...

Source: ONS 2016 based populations at mid-year by age last birthday

..by 2021 there will be 119,000 more people aged 60 or over than there were in 2016

.. 1.1 million people will be aged 60-74 in 2030, accounting for almost 1/5 of the population

There will continue to be more older women than men, due to a longer life expectancy

The majority of households with someone aged 60 or over a highest income earner own their own home...

64% own their home outright

8% have a mortgage

Housing Needs and Ageing

Housing Needs and Ageing

“Most developed world countries have accepted the chronological age of 65 years as a definition of older person”

(World Health Organisation)

Older people are not a homogenous group, so it is important that we recognise they will all have their own individual preferences when it comes to choosing how, and where they live.

Older, elderly, retired and pensioner are all terms used to describe older people. But being an older person, and the reality of managing the challenges that being older may present (either in chronologically or in health terms) can be quite different for each individual.

We know most people do not willingly describe themselves as an older person. We do not want to put older people into boxes and categorise them purely by age. What people consider to be “older” is constantly moving as society changes. People live longer and key measurements, such as the UK state pension age, continue to change.

The term “Third Age”, refers to those who are older or retired and coming into a new phase in their life – many creating new roles, travelling, attending further education etc. Many older people may also be supporting their children (financially or by providing free child care), they may be caring for elderly parents and many will still be working.

It is important for older people to be thinking about their housing needs. It is often a health crisis that forces people to consider their circumstances and look at their housing needs more closely. Illness, a fall or an unscheduled visit to the hospital is the first time many people will stop to consider if their house is suitable, both now and in the longer term. Even then the prospect of taking a major decision to move to a new home is often daunting, and many choose to stay in homes that may have become too large or do not suit their changing needs.

It is in this context that we encourage older people – especially when they are healthy and independent – to be thinking about their housing needs, and where, and how, they will live as they grow older.

Actions

“Strategies integrating housing, health and social care need to consider the three tiers involved in meeting unmet, current and projected needs: new housing supply, built to inclusive and wheelchair design standards in all tenures; balanced with investment in adaptations; and in effective systems and supports for allocating adapted rented housing.”

Julia Fitzpatrick,
Horizon Housing Association

What We Will Do

Delivering the actions to ensure that older people in Scotland enjoy full and positive lives in homes that meet their needs, will require collaboration across many sectors. The Scottish Government will continue to work alongside local authorities, third sector organisations and other stakeholders as well as the monitoring and advisory group.

We will take forward 22 actions under the three principles: Right Advice, Right Home and Right Support, recognising the inter-connection and links to other policies across Government, notably health and social care, equalities, social security and transport. By doing this we will ensure that we meet the appropriate Scottish Government outcomes from the national performance framework.

The actions will form part of a delivery plan which will be developed by the Age, Home and Community monitoring and advisory group. This will set out what we will do to achieve the 22 actions.

Aim – Strategic development: to ensure that the housing system works with other services to support older people to live well and independently.

Actions

1. We will promote greater collaboration between Scotland and the other UK nations to share wider housing information and best practice that benefits an ageing population.

An ageing population is not a phenomenon that is restricted to Scotland. The right house can make a huge impact to the quality of later life. Good physical health, mental health and wellbeing, benefit from improved social connections and have a positive effect on reducing the need for costly interventions. The Scottish Government will take forward plans to engage with housing colleagues from elsewhere in the UK and beyond to share knowledge and best practice during 2018.

Actions

2. We will work with local authorities, health and social care partnerships and other stakeholders to ensure the positive connections between health, social care and housing are recognised in Local Housing Strategies, Housing Contribution Statements and local development plans, to support the delivery of suitable housing in the right place for older people in the private and public sectors.

Legislation has ensured that housing is included as an integral part of health and social care integration, and while progress in some areas has been very positive, there is still room to improve. We recognise that to achieve a fully integrated system we must do more to raise awareness and support a cohesive and effective service. Housing is a key part of integration. The physical environment, comprising buildings, streets, public spaces and natural spaces, are equally important as the social environment represented by relationships, social contact and support networks that make up a community. All need to be connected so that the person has the right house in the right place.

3. We will continue to ask older people for their views and opinions to help inform and monitor the next phase of the strategy.

The Scottish Government is working with Age Scotland to survey older people and gather their views on a variety of housing issues from adaptations to fuel poverty. The results of the first survey are due in summer 2018.

Older people are increasingly more likely to have a fall at home that results in hospital admission

- 8471 admissions amongst over 75s in 2016/17

- an increase of 437 since 2015/16

Source: ISD 2016/17

Aim - Right Advice: We want to help people understand how their housing choices will impact on their lives as they age, and know when and where to access advice to support their decisions.

Actions

Actions

4. We will continue to support the service provided by Care and Repair to older homeowners as a trusted source of advice and handyman services as well as using the opportunity to further develop beneficial partnerships with the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service and Home Energy Scotland.

We recognise the benefits of preventative services and those organisations that are trusted by older people. With more older people living at home, prevention is the key to keeping people out of hospital and avoiding costly interventions. Although the services vary within each local authority, Care and Repair is recognised as providing handyman services to older and disabled homeowners and are one of a small number of services openly welcomed into the home. As shown in the case study their preventative intervention can have a positive outcome for those they visit.

Mr & Mrs D, both in their 80's, have lived in their current home in Arran for more than 25 years. They approached Care & Repair (C & R) after receiving a quote of almost £3,000 to fix a leaking roof. They live on a very tight budget and did not have the money to do the vital repairs needed to keep their home watertight. The C&R officer visited and looked at sources of help.

The officer advised the couple to contact the DWP to get a benefit check as they may be eligible for pension credit. As Mr D had been an agricultural worker before retiring and had served in the forces when he was younger, the officer referred the couple to an agricultural benevolent charity and an armed forces charity. Between them the charities were able to fund the work needed. The couple were also eligible for an annual annuity of £1100 and a heating grant of £300 from the agricultural charity. Mr & Mrs D heard back from the DWP and were also eligible for pension credit.

Unfortunately, not long after, Mr D became ill suffering from breathlessness and mobility problems. With help from C & R the couple obtained help to install a wet floor shower. As they now receive pension credit they received 100% grant funding towards the cost of the shower.

Having identified boiler problems C & R also referred the couple to Home Energy Scotland. Mr & Mrs D were delighted to be told that they were eligible for a new boiler and possibly insulation too.

Once these works are complete, the couple should be able to continue living in their much loved home within their close knit community. [Source-Care and Repair Scotland]

5. The Scottish Government's Fairer Scotland Action Plan sets out a range of measures to ensure older people have a thriving third age.

Our ambition, as set out in the original Fairer Scotland Action Plan, is 'to build a better country - one with low levels of poverty and inequality, genuine equality of opportunity, stronger life chances and support for all those who need it.'

Through the Fairer Scotland Action Plan, published on 5 October 2016, the Scottish Government has committed to:

- help those older people who want to keep working after they have reached state pension age
- fund a Financial Health Check service for older people to help them claim the benefits they are entitled to
- develop a social isolation and loneliness strategy
- improve the current system of Funeral Payments, to help more people, make it simpler to apply and provide help more quickly

The first annual progress report, setting out the Scottish Government's progress against each of the 50 fairness actions was published on 23 November 2017.

6. The Scottish Government will develop an older people's framework making sure we continue to tackle barriers to independent living for older people and promote older people's rights and equality.

Older people make up a significant and growing proportion of the population of Scotland making an important contribution to their communities and to broader society. We will develop a supporting structure for our work with older people, with equality at its heart. The aim is to ensure all of our collective efforts have the maximum impact and effect, so that everyone in Scotland can have a thriving third age.

Actions

Housing Options Scotland is a housing advice charity that offers support to disabled people, military veterans, and older people across Scotland.

Martin and Ann - Dumfries and Galloway

Martin (64) and Ann got in touch with HOS as Martin had complex needs which required him to use a wheelchair. Martin and Ann owned their own property, but the nature of the road and pavement outside of their home meant that Martin was unable to get in and out of his home safely.

HOS sent a housing options report detailing all of their available options, from renting to ownership. With the support of HOS, Martin and Ann contacted an Independent Financial Advisor who helped them obtain a mortgage to buy a property in the same area. The couple are very happy with their new property as it is suitable for Martin's needs and its location means their granddaughter whom they look after, can still attend the same school. [source -Housing Options Scotland]

7. We will continue to tackle inequalities by helping older people get online and develop basic digital skills to improve their home environment.

The Scottish Government published the Digital Strategy for Scotland in 2017 and will continue to improve participation amongst older people, disabled people and those on lower incomes. We want to enable everybody to benefit from the digital world by using the internet to search, buy goods and services online, keep in touch with family and friends, use social networks and have an understanding of how to remain safe and secure. It is essential that the technology and knowledge are shared widely, making an effort to reach out to those who traditionally do not interact with services.

8. We will initiate a “planning for the future” campaign so that older people are prompted to make informed choices about how their housing meets their needs both now and in the future.

Difficult decisions about housing are often put off by the older person or their families until there is a crisis. We want to encourage people to consider what choices they have well in advance. Considering options before decisions become critical, removes the need to have difficult conversations at a stressful time and can allow changes to happen well in advance, preventing a crisis situation. This also helps older people to be in control of the situation and have more of a say in their housing choices.

Actions

Developed for Falkirk Council, the “Do you want to move or stay?” leaflet, is a set of hints and tips for people who are beginning to think about whether their current house is still right for them. It includes a checklist to help find out if you are in the right house and where to get advice.

The council talked to older people who live in the Falkirk area and who have moved house. They also produced a Directory that provides information about the services and community groups in the area. They stress that the most important advice is: “This is about what is right for you”.

Aim – Right Home: We want to ensure there is sufficient supply and choice of housing for older people, so that everyone can find a home that works well for them.

The vast majority of older people live in ordinary homes (98%) not specialist housing or care homes. 72% of older people are home owners, 22% live in the social rented sector and 4% live in the private rented sector and 2% in specialist housing or care homes (source: SHS2016). In most cases housing that is suitable for older people will generally work well for everyone.

Health conditions or frailty are often limiting factors to the right home, but homes with the right design can help older people remain in their homes. The Scottish Government will consider the recommendations of the Equalities and

Human Rights Commission (EHRC) report on housing and disabled people published in May 2018 as we take forward the actions within Age, Home and Community – The Next Phase.

Actions

9. The Scottish Government has committed to delivering at least 50,000 affordable homes over the lifetime of the current Parliament and will ensure that this includes flexibility to deliver homes which can be adapted for older people and people with physical disabilities.

We want everyone to have a home that is able to meet their needs and to ensure people are able to live independently. Accessibility of course means different things depending on the level of mobility.

The vast majority of the new homes delivered as part of the 50,000 affordable homes target will meet varying needs standards, which means they will either be accessible or will be easily adapted to be accessible. Based on current health trends, and even improving health trends, the impact of the ageing population means that the number of wheelchairs users is likely to increase.

Taking account of local needs and priorities is important when planning new housing supply and this is particularly so in rural areas. The Rural and Islands Housing Funds will provide £30 million from 2016-17 to 2021 to increase the supply of affordable housing of all tenures in rural Scotland and contribute to the affordable homes target.

Actions

10. Scottish Government will work with stakeholders at both national and local level to improve the strategic planning, funding and delivery arrangements for adaptations.

The role of housing adaptations in supporting independent living is well recognised. However, the delivery of those adaptations is seen to be complex and driven by tenure, as much as the needs of the people who require these. We will review and strengthen where necessary the existing guidance for health and social care partnerships on the role of housing in supporting prevention and in delivering successful health and wellbeing outcomes for individuals.

11. The Scottish Government will continue to support improvement of housing quality by implementing fuel poverty measures to ensure older people have a warm and comfortable home.

The Scottish Government has always prioritised tackling fuel poverty and is committed to ensuring that everyone in Scotland lives in a warm home that is affordable to heat. We are on track to deliver our commitment to make half a billion pounds available over 4 years and, by the end of 2021, we will have allocated over £1 billion pounds since 2009 on tackling fuel poverty and improving energy efficiency.

We have also consulted on a new long term fuel poverty strategy, including proposals on new targets and putting in place a revised definition of fuel poverty. As part of our Strategy, we will introduce a Fuel Poverty (Target, Definition and Strategy)

- (Scotland) Bill to set a new statutory fuel poverty target to drive forward the provision of support to those who are most in need of help to heat their homes.

Mrs M and her husband had experienced constant problems and breakdowns with their boiler. She contacted Home Energy Scotland for free advice and discovered she was eligible to have a new gas boiler and seven new radiators at no cost. “ Our new boiler is much more efficient. We have a large flat with high ceilings, but it now takes less time to heat up and is warmer than before, which is great.”
<http://www.greenerscotland.org/home-energy/case-studies>

12. The Scottish Government has increased access for older people to our shared equity home ownership schemes and will work with other organisations to address the financial barriers to older people moving to a suitable home.

Since October 2017 older people have had priority access to a range of shared equity home ownership schemes including Help to Buy (Scotland), Open Market Shared Equity (OMSE) and New Supply Shared Equity (NSSE). For many, selling their current home will not provide enough finance to purchase a new home that is suitable for their needs. Shared equity can help them move to a property more suited to their needs, for example one without stairs and a level access shower instead of a bath, or help people move to a new home which will allow them to be closer to family and care support.

Actions

The Link Group Ltd spent £4.3 million constructing 38 'independent living' homes, aimed at retirement living, for social rent and new supply shared equity. Abbey Place, Paisley included £2.3 million funding from the Scottish Government. Built by Westpoint Construction, there are 13 one and two bedroom properties for social rent with three designed to meet the needs of a wheelchair user. There are also 25 homes to buy through the New Supply Shared Equity scheme. Each property has gas central heating and hot water systems, high thermal insulation and double glazing to create warm, comfortable and energy efficient homes that will be easy and economical to run. It also has a fully furnished day lounge and en-suite guest bedroom as well as an area for storing and charging mobility scooters.

13. We will examine options to meet the demand for reasonably priced homes that suit the needs of older people.

We recognise that the majority of older people live in ordinary homes in their local communities. Local authorities have a key role in planning for the housing needs of everyone within their local community including housing for older people and wheelchair housing. The Scottish Government is developing guidance for local authorities and other stakeholders on the need to set a realistic target for the delivery of wheelchair accessible housing across all tenures and to monitor delivery. This will be incorporated into revised Local Housing Strategy guidance.

The Scottish Government will explore options for further research to identify numbers of new private sector completions that achieve accessibility standards similar to those of Housing for Varying Needs. We will continue to work with house builders, local authorities and planners to ensure that all future building takes account of the needs of a broader range of purchasers including alternative models such as co-housing and self-build.

Housing Options for Older People (HOOP) Glasgow

HOOP explores the individual housing circumstances and support needs of older people, aiming to help them make informed choices at a time of significant change in their lives. It aims to help prevent delayed hospital discharge by assisting health & social work colleagues navigate what can be a complex housing system. Housing staff are deployed in health and social work locations liaising with hospitals, social work and intermediate care units.

An 84 year old lady was recently discharged from hospital following 28 admissions in the last year. She had lived in the same home for 47 years and had lost her only friend 4 years ago. Housing Options team interviewed her in her home and noted she was anxious and isolated which contributed to the number of hospital visits. She is partially sighted and has multiple health conditions and was struggling to keep her home clean. As part of the overall intervention the team arranged a visit to a sheltered housing complex near her home. She enjoyed meeting other residents and said she had a great day. The Project Officer helped complete applications for sheltered housing. Since the initial Housing Options interview there have been no further admissions to hospital. [provided by SFHA]

14. The Scottish Government will take action through the National Dementia Strategy to ensure those diagnosed with dementia have access to the right housing and support to enable them to live in their home independently for as long as possible.

Scotland's National Dementia Strategy 2017-2020 sets out a shared vision of a Scotland where people with dementia and those who care for them have access to timely, skilled and well-coordinated support from diagnosis to end of life which helps achieve the outcomes that matter to them. For people with dementia, a familiar home environment is particularly important, especially as their symptoms develop. Early consideration of the role of aids and adaptations is an essential part of enabling people to live safely at home. The Scottish Government will work with stakeholders to promote and develop the role of housing professionals to recognise and improve practice when providing housing solutions for those with dementia.

CIH Scotland dementia research

The research focused on improving the links between housing organisations and partners in health, social care and the third sector, with a specific emphasis on the role of the housing professional in meeting the needs of those living with dementia. The research mapped out the role of housing staff and services across four key interactions, which form important stages of the dementia journey.

15. The Scottish Government will investigate the possibility of extending an equity loan scheme for house repairs and adaptations.

We know that most older people who own their own homes and live on fixed incomes often worry about paying for house repairs and keeping their home safe to live in. Lenders can be reluctant to provide loans to those who are no longer working so at present the options are limited to commercial equity release or savings to pay for the work needed. The Scottish Government piloted the Help to Adapt equity loan scheme which enabled older people to access the equity in their home to pay for preventative adaptations that they need now or in the near future. We will use the learning from this alongside the experience from the Home Energy Efficiency Programmes for Scotland (HEEPS) equity loan scheme, to look at future products to help older people fund house repairs and adaptations using the equity in their homes, to provide greater control and choice over their current and future housing needs.

16. We will work with housing stakeholders and organisations working with older and disabled people, to increase awareness of the Home2Fit accessible housing register.

While many older and disabled people live in ordinary homes, it is sometimes necessary to install adaptations to ensure they can live independently. When they move it makes sense to reallocate the adapted properties to those in most need. The ideal situation would be to reuse the home with its adaptations making full use of the equipment. At present, however, homes are often re-let and adaptations removed because of a lack of awareness that these homes are available to people that may benefit from them. Improving the posting and sharing of information between housing providers will result in better use of adaptations and reduce duplication of resources that already exist.

Aim – Right Support: We want to ensure that all older people in Scotland have the support they need to enjoy full and positive lives at home or in a homely setting.

17. Scottish Government will continue to develop Scotland’s new social security system ensuring that it treats people with dignity and respect and supports people while applying for, being assessed for, and receiving benefits with a Scottish agency delivering devolved benefits.

Older people can continue to live independently in their own homes for longer if their incomes are maximised. This includes claiming the benefits and financial support they are entitled to. The Scottish Government set up ‘Experience Panels’ involving over 2,400 people who have recent experience of receiving benefits to help design and test the new system to ensure it works for them. Older people are well represented on the panels. With the help of panel members, the process from application to award will be redesigned to take a different approach to providing social security.

The Scottish Government is committed to protecting disability benefits, including Attendance Allowance, ensuring that they continue to be non-means tested. Through the new powers Scottish Government is increasing Carer’s Allowance to the same level as Jobseeker’s Allowance from summer 2018. Improving financial support for carers will build on wider support being introduced in 2018 through the Carers (Scotland) Act 2016. The Act extends and enhances the rights of unpaid carers. The new legislation will help ensure better and more consistent support for both adult carers and young carers.

18. Scottish Government will develop a social isolation strategy to address loneliness.

In January 2018 the Scottish Government launched its draft strategy to tackle social isolation and loneliness for consultation. This can impact on anyone regardless of age, status, circumstances or identity. Older people are particularly vulnerable to social isolation and loneliness resulting from loss of friends and family, reduced mobility or income. Studies have shown that being lonely or isolated can have a detrimental effect on health and wellbeing. Consultation events were organised throughout the country to gather views from individuals and stakeholders about what is needed in the community to reduce social isolation and loneliness and increase social connection. Over 400 responses were submitted to the consultation, which closed on April 27th. Following the end of the consultation, all responses are being analysed and considered along with other available evidence to inform the development of the final strategy.

Loneliness or social isolation is just one issue that can impact on overall mental health. The Mental Health Strategy 2017 -2027 makes it clear that older people should have the same support regardless of age. Mental and physical health are equally important issues that can impact on underlying conditions that affect health.

Community Connectors has been developed by Glasgow Council for the Voluntary Sector (GCVS) and Glasgow & West of Scotland Forum of Housing Associations (GWSF). It is funded by Glasgow's Integrated Care Fund. They provide support to people over 60, and/or their carers, to help take positive steps to improve health and wellbeing, increase the level of social interaction and help individuals enjoy a more vibrant, independent life within the community.

What clients say:

"If only it had been around earlier, I think it would have kept me out of hospital."

"The new club has allowed me to meet new company and have people to talk to, I'm heading towards my goal of getting involved in the community again."

"I wouldn't be here without Community Connectors. I just sat in the house for two years after my wife died but Community Connectors changed all that. I have something to do every day to pass the time now."

19. We will work with key stakeholders to develop training to support frontline housing and other staff to provide them with the skills to conduct housing options conversations with clients.

People's housing needs change over time and it is important that tenants keep their landlords informed of any changes. Many Registered Social Landlords already offer housing health checks for their tenants which allow them to make best use of their stock. The Scottish Social Housing Charter will continue to support this work. We will also support workforce training to provide housing and other staff with the skills to have conversations with older people and those with dementia, to consider their housing options. This includes supporting third sector organisations that provide advice services to older people and their families.

20. We will increase understanding and use of Technology Enabled Care (TEC) in all tenures.

Technology Enabled Care (TEC) is defined as "where outcomes for individuals in home or community settings are improved through the application of technology as an integral part of quality, cost-effective care and support". This includes telecare, telehealth, remote access and consultations, and can extend to citizens use of apps and digital information to support health and wellbeing.

TEC is a key delivery programme for the emerging Digital Health and Care Strategy - creating the conditions at national and local levels for scale up and adoption. While Telecare has been around for some time there are new opportunities with the planned shift to digital telecare over the next few years and more citizen centred approaches which can support both health and care needs using familiar technology. For many, TEC is a new area where outcomes for individuals in home or community settings can be improved through the application of technology as an integral part of quality cost-effective care and support. Raising awareness and sharing good practice in health, social care and housing is important to expand the use of and understanding of TEC. The Scottish Government published its Digital Health & Care Strategy in April 2018 and builds on the strong partnership with the housing sector to support people to stay at home in their community for longer and minimising the need for hospital admission.

“Technology is transforming all our lives - whatever age we are. It has massive potential to help deliver these actions and to support older people to live longer, healthier lives at home or in community settings.”

Amanda Britain,
Advisor, Technology Enabled Care
Programme

TEC Funding has helped Angus Council develop a seated activity programme in 3 local sports centres and 4 care homes. Weekly activity classes from 2 of the sports centres are operational, with the 3rd being launched. A short YouTube video “Pull up a Chair” has been developed for promotional purposes, and will be played on screens at local sports centres. Most care homes across Angus have now expressed an interest in taking part in the programme. Testing Video Active in sheltered housing is also being considered. “They (Residents) don’t usually all join in the activity but they’ve all joined in with this”.

21. We will work with partners to fully embed Self-directed Support (SDS) as our mainstream approach to social care.

Through the Social Care (Self-directed Support) (Scotland) Act 2013, adults, children and carers who require social care are supported to decide what matters to them (their personal outcomes), how their support is delivered, by whom and within the available budget. This makes sure individuals are empowered to be equal partners in their care, support decisions and participate in social and economic life. There are many examples of positive progress in implementing SDS and we will continue to work with stakeholders and local authorities to support the development of new, alternative and preventative types of support within local communities. However, more needs to be done to raise awareness and encourage uptake.

Actions

MECOPP, Scotland's only dedicated Minority Ethnic Carers Organisation, received funding from the Scottish Government Self-directed Support fund to develop a Community Brokerage Project for South Asian and Chinese Communities with long term health conditions and disabilities and their carers.

A 72 year old Pakistani man (Mr A) was referred to the project from a local dementia service. Mr A and his wife had moved in with their daughter and her family to allow him to have additional family support. Despite being fluent in English and Urdu, he had become isolated in his new home due to his dementia diagnosis, and because he was now living in a new area. His wife was becoming irritable with him as she didn't understand the effects of his dementia, and his daughter was working full-time, trying to raise a young family and support her parents. MECOPP worked with Mr A to identify his interests and were able to link him up with a number of social and gardening projects that suited his needs. They were also able to identify Edinburgh based peer support services for people caring for someone with dementia. The additional support arranged through the brokerage project means Mr A and his family are now coping much better with the dementia diagnosis. [MECOPP]

22. Accessible transport is vital to communities so that people can stay socially active, particularly for those in rural areas or later in life. The Scottish Government will take forward a collaborative review of our National Transport Strategy, with accessibility identified early on as an important theme, as well as bring forward a new Transport Bill to lock in improvements to the system. The Scottish Government is investing £53.5 million in bus services to keep fares affordable, and is continuing to support the National Concessionary Travel Scheme to allow older and disabled people improved access to services, facilities and social networks by free scheduled bus services.

“If I didn't have coping strategies to remain independent and mobile I'd be very lonely and soon sink into depression. Travel brings normality to an often abnormal life”

Upstream (www.upstream.scot) is a project funded by Life Changes Trust and ESP Group, a company that provides mobility services. In the Western Isles they are working with the Dementia Friendly Community project at An Lanntair along with Alzheimer Scotland, regularly visiting various groups in Stornoway and more remote locations to learn about the challenges of island transport, with a particular focus on sea and air links. In East Lothian they have strong links with Dementia Friendly East Lothian. Workshops are held with memory skills groups and carers groups to gather insights about travel in an area which, though close to Edinburgh, has many rural areas and related transport challenges. In Aberdeen, supported by the Aberdeen Council of Voluntary Organisations \(ACVO\) and Alzheimer Scotland they are working with people living with dementia exploring links with local transport operators and planners.

Measuring Progress and Reporting Back

Measuring Progress and Reporting Back

We will continue to produce an annual monitoring report to record progress. The report will collate a range of indicators and evidence relative to older people and older people's housing. The data will position the strategy relative to a number of performance measures at national and local level. The report is intended to provide high level, summary data and a starting point for further analysis. Work has already been undertaken by analysts to identify National Level Monitoring Outcomes and Indicators, as well as monitoring outcomes at local levels. We will update the existing monitoring and evaluation framework to take account of the new actions.

Measuring Progress and Reporting Back

The actions make a contribution to a number of Scottish Government National Outcomes and National Health and Wellbeing Outcomes as shown below.

Scottish Government National Outcomes	National Health and Wellbeing Outcomes
We live in communities that are inclusive, empowered, resilient and safe. We respect, protect and fulfil human rights and live free from discrimination. We are healthy and active. We tackle poverty by sharing opportunities, wealth and power more equally.	People are able to look after and improve their own health and wellbeing and live in good health for longer. People, including those with disabilities or long term conditions, or who are frail, are able to live, as far as reasonably practicable, independently and at home or in a homely setting in their community. People who use health and social care services have positive experiences of those services, and have their dignity respected. Health and social care services are centred on helping to maintain or improve the quality of life of people who use those services. People who provide unpaid care are supported to look after their own health and wellbeing, including reducing any negative impact of their caring role on their own health and well-being. People using health and social care services are safe from harm. Resources are used effectively and efficiently in the provision of health and social care services

Monitoring and Advisory Group

The group will continue to meet twice a year to discuss progress on the actions and to advise on where delivery is not as expected.

Following publication of the refreshed strategy, the first action for the group will be to develop a detailed delivery plan to monitor progress at biannual meetings.

Older Peoples Voices

We will continue to work with older people and the organisations that represent them, not only to measure progress made by the refreshed strategy, but also to gather information to reflect current issues and respond to changes impacting on housing for older people.

Beyond the Strategy Period

Beyond the Strategy Period

As stated at the outset of this refreshed strategy, we want all of Scotland's older people to be able to live independently in their own homes for as long as they wish to do so. The actions set out in this plan under Right Advice, Right Home and Right Support will help us achieve this aim. Over the last 5 years unexpected issues have arisen and we have had to adapt and mitigate where possible. During the next phase, we will continue to respond and adapt to fresh challenges. Issues such as population demographics and an increase in the state pension age will continue to impact on Scotland and its older people well beyond the end of the current strategy timescales. Going forward, we will continue to work with older people, local authorities, third sector organisations and other stakeholders to ensure older people in Scotland enjoy full and positive lives in homes that meet their needs.

Annex A

Annex A: Summary of Commitments

1	We will promote greater collaboration between the UK nations to share wider housing information and practice that benefits an ageing population.
2	We will work with local authorities, health and social care partnerships and other stakeholders to ensure the positive connections between health, social care and housing are recognised in Local Housing Strategies, Housing Contribution Statements and local development plans, to support the delivery of suitable housing in the right place for older people in the private and public sectors.
3	We will continue to ask older people for their views and opinions to help inform and monitor the next phase of the strategy.
4	We will continue to support the service provided by Care and Repair to older homeowners as a trusted source of advice and handy-person services, as well as using the opportunity to further develop beneficial partnerships with the fire service and Home Energy Scotland.
5	The Scottish Government will continue to support the Fairer Scotland Action Plan measures to ensure older people have a thriving third age.
6	The Scottish Government will develop an older people's framework, making sure we continue to tackle barriers to independent living for older people and promote older people's rights and equality.
7	We will continue to tackle inequalities by helping older people get online and develop basic digital skills to improve their home environment.
8	We will initiate a "planning for the future" campaign so that older people are prompted to make informed choices about how their housing meets their needs both now and in the future.
9	The Scottish Government has committed to delivering at least 50,000 affordable homes over the lifetime of the current Parliament and will ensure that this includes flexibility to deliver homes which can be adapted for older people and people with physical disabilities.
10	Scottish Government will work with stakeholders at both national and local level to improve the strategic planning, funding and delivery arrangements for adaptations.
11	The Scottish Government will continue to support improvement of housing quality by implementing fuel poverty measures to ensure older people have a warm and comfortable home.

Annex A

12	The Scottish Government has increased access to our shared equity home ownership schemes for older people and will work with other organisations to address the financial barriers to older people moving to a suitable home.
13	We will explore options to meet the demand for reasonably priced homes that suit the needs of older people.
14	The Scottish Government will take action through the National Dementia Strategy to ensure those diagnosed with dementia have access to the right housing and support to enable them to live in their home independently for as long as possible.
15	The Scottish Government will investigate the possibility of extending an equity loan scheme for house repairs and adaptations.
16	We will work with housing stakeholders and organisations working with older and disabled people, to increase awareness of the Home2Fit accessible housing register.
17	The Scottish Government will continue to develop Scotland's new social security system, ensuring that it treats people with dignity and respect and supports people while applying for, being assessed for, and receiving benefits, with a Scottish agency delivering devolved benefits.
18	Scottish Government will develop a social isolation strategy to address loneliness.
19	We will work with key stakeholders to develop training to support frontline housing and other staff to provide them with the skills to conduct housing options conversations with clients.
20	We will increase the understanding and use of Technology Enabled Care (TEC) in all tenures.
21	We will work with partners to fully embed Self-directed Support (SDS) as our mainstream approach to social care.
22	The Scottish Government will take forward a collaborative review of our National Transport Strategy, with accessibility identified as a key aspect to enabling older people to stay socially active.
